

First let me say I am one of the lucky few to have access to broadband service. Not only that but I don't have to deal with a giant like AT&T for my service. Suscom is a local company that provides me with better service and faster speeds than the nationals at nearly 1/2 the cost. They have invested millions in providing the latest fiber optics system and continue to stay on the cutting edge of tech. It is my wish you keep your hands off companies such as Suscom. To involve them in this push to allow outside companies to share their lines will only drive up my costs as it did with my phone service. Please be careful when making regulations concerning broadband provided by local cable companies so you don't make the same mistakes you did with the local phone companies
